

Spiritual Friends

By NoKi Moon

Rabbit

In honor of the awakening spring, this month I have chosen to tell you about the Rabbit. Rabbits are beautiful creatures. They are notoriously known for being rapid breeders, hence the expression “multiply like rabbits.” Not to be confused with the common hare, rabbits are born hairless and blind, while hares are wide opened, furred and ready to go.

Rabbits are a symbol of fertility and rebirth. They may be associated with playful sexuality, which could lead to the impression of innocence.

To dream of rabbits means that a change is in your future, and it will be a favorable one. To see a white rabbit means loyalty in relationships.

The rabbit is the fear caller. If a rabbit visits you, he may be trying to tell you to stop fearing life. Stop wondering what if and just go for it.

To see a rabbit in your tealeaves can mean several things. Prosperity may be on your way, but you may have to be brave and assertive in order to prosper. You may need to slow down and get organized. Slow and steady wins the race. If Ostara or Easter is coming up, it may be a significant time.

A rabbit’s left hind foot is always considered a good luck charm (not so lucky for the rabbit I would say). Carry one around with you when you need some extra luck. The color should designate what you need luck for, green for money, red for love, etc.

In old times, if a pregnant woman injected her urine into a rabbit, it would die. If the woman wasn’t pregnant the rabbit was supposed to live. This myth is actually false. The hormone in pregnant woman cause an ovarian change in the rabbit, and it had to be killed to observe the change. So the rabbit always died. The saying “if the rabbit doesn’t die” still exists today.